

Privacy Beginnings: A Microsoft perspective
Jay Cannon

Abstract:

How did privacy evolve from my first experience to the present? Where are the biggest privacy concerns and how do we help companies prepare for it?

Bio:

Jay Cannon (JC) grew up in the projects of western Michigan. After high school, he joined the Navy where he worked on the flight deck of aircraft carriers. After leaving the Navy, JC spent twenty years as a computer programmer, mostly at startups, in the United States, England, France and Sweden, eventually ending up at Microsoft. After working at Microsoft for sixteen years, where he focused on online privacy, he left and moved to DC. There, he worked in Congress as a technical fellow on the Ways and Means Committee. He is now retired and focuses on writing. He has written two technical manuals, five science fiction novels and a poetry book. His latest book is Crazy Rich Aliens.
